In a recent incident, a passenger entered the Cyprus Republic on a flight from a Category A country, whilst his initial country of departure was a Category C country, without having in his possession the electronic CyprusFlightPass. When asked at the airport of the Republic to fill-in the form in handwriting, so that the Medical Services would have his details, he wrote down the wrong information in respect of his flight details. Following instructions by the Minister of Transport in consultation with the Minister of Health, the said passenger has been reported by the Civil Aviation Department to the Chief of Police for further examination of the case, in order to ascertain whether he has committed any criminal offences.

It must be noted that the specific passenger, when he presented symptoms and underwent privately a laboratory test for COVID-19, whereby proving positive to the virus, he informed the Medical Services that his initial country of departure was a Category C country.
